Dear Kate,

Sorry you were troubled. You ask what you should say to him. You might say that he spoilt his case by his aggressive behaviour. I doubt if he knows that you catch more flies with honey than with vinegar.

One of his more reasonable co-residents has phoned me and I dealing with him. The fundamental issue for me is that we cannot deal with the undeniably bad behaviour of some people by the enclosure of public spaces into gated community. This would only make the matter worse.

Gratefully,

Colin.

I left a message on his answerphone saying that you did not wish me to pass on your number, and I'd be grateful if he didn't trouble us again.

He did ring again, having just spoken to you. He asked me to ask if you would visit the site or make contact with them. I said I would ask. I'm afraid he'll be back to me, and he is very boring. What shall I say?
Kate
